Speaker Info: Dasha Kiper began her career in Dementia Disorders once she became a live-in care giver. That experience has led to over a decade of supporting caregivers, providing trainings, support and supervisions for mental health professionals. She is the author of the book “Travelers to Unimaginable Lands: Stories of Dementia, the Caregiver, and the Human Brain” where she weaves stories and brain science to illuminate the neurological and existential challenges of caring for someone with a dementia disorder.

Three learning objectives:

1. Why dementia symptoms feel so personal and how this complicates preexisting family dynamics
2. How being a dementia caregiver puts a cognitive strain on their mind not just an emotional one
3. Why it's vital caregivers seek connection outside their relationship with PWDD
